Can you reverse look up a google voice number

Something went wrong. Wait a moment and try again. If you're trying to figure out who called you from that mysterious phone number, there are plenty of ways to reverse check the number. Some methods work, some don't, and most try to up-sell you to other background check services.Why Do You Need to Lookup a Number?Most of the time, those unknown numbers originate from scam artists or telemarketers. But there are times when you might want to track down who's on the other side of that phone number. For example: You want to protect your kids from potentially dangerous predators or bullies who are calling their cell phone or the landline at home. There's an unknown number that's numerous times and you think it may be important. Someone has called but you can't understand the garbled message, but you need to know if it's a call you need to return. Is It Easy to Use a Reverse Phone Lookup?More often than not, the result of a reverse phone lookup will simply reveal that it's a mobile number originating from a nearby town.The traditional site to use is Whitepages.com. If the number is a homeowner's landline, or a business number, you'll likely see in the results the owner's name and point of origin. If you're looking up a cell phone number, you will rarely get any meaningful information about the caller, at least not for free.There's a Whitepages.com premium membership fee, monthly or annually, that gives you more information on lookups. Many employers use these services when vetting a potential employee.Looking Up Numbers on Social MediaHead to Facebook, Snapchat, Instagram or any other social media sites and type in a phone number. You may get a direct hit on who owns the number. If a member's phone number is public, it will pop up. With Facebook, you can unlink your phone number from your account or make it private, but there have been reports that scammers are able to locate even private phone numbers on Facebook accounts.Is Paying for the Information Worthwhile?Most sites that offer reverse phone lookups offer the information for a price. Some sites offer information at a nominal fee, like Peoplefinders.com, which has a trial membership. Or, if you'd prefer, you can pay to access a one-time full report. Though you wouldn't want to pay for a report for every random number that you receive, it may be a worthwhile minimal investment to track down certain callers.Using Google for Reverse Phone LookupsGoogle is one of the best tools to look up any phone number for free. Simply type the exact number with hyphens in the search box and hit enter. The results may be mixed. Or, you may hit a direct link to a site where the owner's phone is already inadvertently listed.At times, you'll receive results that have long lists of numbers, including the one you're looking up, and it'll say it's fraudulent. It may very well be, but you can always re-enter the phone number in a different way, such as adding parenthesis around the area code, which may change results. It could be a scammer using Google Voice number to try and scam you of your hard earned money. There have been any reports of Indian scammers using Text Now and Google Voice numbers such as the famous tech support scammers. Have you been called on Google Voice constantly by an unknown google voice numbers? With the help of the Google Voice Number Look Up Tool, you can now reveal who is behind that unknown number. Last year I shared three things you should know about Google Voice—basically a rundown of three cool ways to use the service. Here's a fourth: Use it as a disposable phone number. See, when you sign up for Google Voice, which you can do for any new or existing Google/Gmail account, you get the option of choosing a new phone number. (You can also port an existing number, but that's not part of the discussion today.) One of the neat things about Google Voice is that you can route calls to that number to any/all of your existing numbers (home, office, cell phone, etc.). However, I don't use mine that way. Instead, I use my Google Voice number for those times when I'm signing up for a free trial, or registering for a service, or anything else that requires a phone number—but I don't want to use my home or mobile number. Like most folks, I'm concerned about my privacy. I don't want telemarketers contacting me, and I don't want any extra personal info exposed if some hacker breaks into a site where I've registered. The beauty of Google Voice is that if I ever do get a call on that number, the only intrusion will be an email notification. Then I can hop online to check any voicemails. The one exception might be if you're buying something online. If your phone number doesn't match the one that's attached to your credit card, the order might not go through. That said, I've rarely run into a problem on this front—it's simply something to be aware of. If you've found another good use for Google Voice, by all means share it in the comments. In the meantime, why not grab yourself a disposable email address, too? Contributing Editor Rick Broida writes about business and consumer technology. Since Google Voice numbers aren't listed in phone books or connected to physical addresses, they're difficult to trace. If law enforcement agencies become involved, Google provides them with your account information, including the IP address from which you created the account and placed calls. How do I reverse a Google Voice number? Reclaim your Voice number On your computer, go to voice.google.com. At the top right, click Settings . Under Linked numbers, click New linked number. Enter the phone number to link. To verify your number, Voice provides a six-digit code: Enter the code and then click Verify. Click Claim. Can Google Voice be traced to email? Well, anything's "hackable", so there are never any guarantees. But, no, Google does not publish anything linking your Gmail address to your Google Voice phone number, unless you enable sharing it yourself. What can a scammer do with my Google Voice number? Google Voice allows you to make and receive calls and texts free of charge. A scammer who gets a hold of your number would need a verification code to activate the account. Once they have it, they can use Google Voice to cause all sorts of mischief using your phone number. What happens when someone calls my Google Voice number? Whenever someone calls your Google Voice number, it will ring every device linked to your account. You can of course also make outgoing calls from all of these devices as well, even including your computer. No matter which device you dial from, the receiver's caller ID will see your new Google Voice number. Is there a reverse DNS lookup tool for Google? You might be wondering, is it possible to trace an unknown Google Voice number back to its owner? Is there a way to find someone's Google Voice number? We answer those questions and show you how to find your own Google Voice number in this handy guide. Also read: Google Voice: What It Is, How It Works, and How to Use It? What Is a Google Voice Number? Photo by nguyen14 When you set up your Google Voice account, the app gives you a phone number that you can use with the service. If you live in the US, you get to select your number. You can do all the basics with your Google Voice number: send and receive texts, make domestic and international calls, and send and receive voicemails. In addition, Google Voice also lets you read voicemail transcripts, customize voicemail greetings, and block spam callers, among others. And the great news is that, if you live in the US or Canada, calls using your Google Voice number are almost always free. Download Google Voice on Android Download Google Voice on iOS How to Look Up Your Own Google Voice Number on Android or iOS Photo by Google LLC from the Google Play Store To find your own Google Voice number using a phone or a tablet, follow these easy steps: Launch the Google Voice app on your tablet or phone. Tap on the Menu icon (the three parallel, horizontal lines at the top left) and then on the Settings option. Under Account, you'll see your Google Voice number. If you can't find your Google Voice number even after following these steps, it might be that Google Voice isn't set up for the account you're using. In that case, you can do any of the following: If you're using a different account with Google Voice, switch to that account by proceeding with these steps: Tap on your profile icon at the top right corner of the screen. Select the account that you wish to use. If you haven't linked Google Voice with your account yet, select "Get a Google Voice number." If you have a work or school Google account that you wish to link to Google Voice, you'll need to reach out to your administrator. How to Look Up Your Own Google Voice Number Using a Computer Screenshot from Google Voice You can also lookup your own Google Voice number using your computer. To do so, simply follow these steps: Launch your web browser, and head over to voice.google.com. Click on the Sign In button in the top right corner. Then, type in your Google account credentials. Click on Settings (the gear icon) in the top right corner. Under Account, you'll see your Google Voice number. If you don't see a Google Voice number under "Account," the account you're using probably isn't linked to Google Voice. To remedy that, you can do any of the following: If you've set up a different Google account for Google Voice, switch to that account by following these steps: On your web browser, head over to voice.google.com Click on the Sign In button, and log in using your Google account credentials. Click on the Next button. To link a personal account to Google Voice, select Choose. To link a work or school account to Google Voice, you'll have to reach out to your administrator. Finding Your Username or Email Address for Google Voice Screenshot from the Google Voice Username Help Page It might also be the case that you know your Google Voice number but you can't remember your Google Voice username or email address. Not to worry, because Google lets you easily retrieve that information. Here's a step-by-step guide on how you can look up your Google Voice username or email address: Head over to the Google Voice Username Help Page. Type in your Google Voice number in the input field. Then, select submit. Follow the instructions you see on your screen. Google will then send your Google Voice information to the email linked to your Google Voice number. Reverse Google Voice Number Lookup Looking up your own Google Voice number seems easy enough, but what if you want to perform a Google Voice number lookup on someone else? Or is it possible to look up a person's Google Voice username or email? We answer those questions in the following section. Can You Trace a Google Voice Number? Photo from Google Voice Google Voice numbers aren't publicly listed or linked to the owner's physical address; they're only connected to an online account. Thus, you won't find them in print or online phone books, making them generally difficult to trace. When one of your contacts calls you using Google Voice, you'll see their name on your caller ID. However, if an unknown Google Voice number calls you, you won't be able to identify them using standard phone traces. That said, you can perform a Google Voice Number lookup on another person. If a person lists their Google Voice number on a social networking site, blog, or web forum, their number can be traced back to them via a simple Google search. Therefore, if you want your Google Voice number to be hard to trace, avoid publicly posting it anywhere online. Also, don't give it out to someone you don't know. What if an unknown Google Voice number scammed you or has been harassing you? In such cases, it's best to have law enforcement authorities involved as they will have the means to trace the number. Google can fish out the caller's account information, placed calls, and the IP address they used to create their Google Voice account and give it to the authorities. In addition, Google also suspends their Google Voice account. Can You Trace a Google Voice Number to an Email? A person's Google Voice email shares the same level of traceability as their Google Voice number. While you can retrieve your username or email using your Google Voice number, you can't use someone's Google Voice number to find out their email or username. That's because, just like with Google Voice numbers, emails or usernames linked to the online telephone service aren't publicly listed. So, unless the person publicly shares it on their website or somewhere else online, you can't trace a person's Gmail from their Google Voice number. Final Thoughts It's fairly simple to perform a Google Voice number lookup if you've forgotten yours. All it takes is a few taps, a couple of minutes, and you're good to go! However, the same can't be said with performing a reverse Google Voice number lookup or tracing a Google Voice number to an email. That's because those data aren't publicly listed, unlike with traditional landline numbers. That said, as we discussed above, it isn't entirely impossible to look up a Google Voice number or email if you need to. Hopefully, this guide has helped you find your Google Voice number and give you an insight into tracing someone else's Google Voice number. Have you tried tracing a caller through their Google Voice number or finding someone's Google Voice number? If you have, feel free to share your insights and experiences in the comments!
